

Dear FCC,

Please do not stop regulating broadband service. Regulatory review is required to ensure the continued viability of smaller DSL providers, such as Sonic.net in California. As a Web Developer producing industry leading websites, I choose to use a smaller provider because of the far superior customer service, and slightly better pricing. If the regional Bells were no longer faced with FCC oversight, they would quickly price the smaller players out of the market. This is bad for business, and bad for competition. I rely on my provider to provide consistent service, and if I were forced to use a company like SBC/Yahoo, I'm sure it would impact my business greatly.

Thanks for your consideration,

Roger Clapp
